

AN INVITATION TO ORGANISATIONS

Turn what you throw away into something you can report on.

Givny is a free platform where households in Ghana pass on things they no longer need. We are inviting businesses, NGOs, schools and faith groups to do the same – and to keep the evidence of what that diverted.

Clearing things out costs you money. It doesn't have to.

Every organisation eventually has to move things on – an office refit, a change of stock, the end of a school term. The usual answer is a skip, a disposal fee, and a storeroom that fills up again anyway.

What it costs you today

- A disposal or haulage fee for things that still work
- Storage space held by items nobody will use again
- Staff time arranging collection and paperwork
- Nothing to show for any of it afterwards

What it costs on Givny

- Nothing – listing is free, and always will be
- Someone comes to you and collects it
- A few minutes per item, from any phone
- A record of what was diverted, and who it reached

The part most organisations care about

Sustainability and CSR reporting increasingly asks what an organisation diverted from landfill and who benefited. That question is difficult to answer for goods given away informally, because nothing is written down. Everything passed on through Givny is recorded as it happens, so the answer exists before anyone asks for it.

WHO LISTS ON GIVNY

Businesses

Clear stock, fixtures and office equipment – and evidence the diversion for reporting.

NGOs & non-profits

Reach the people you serve, and source goods you would otherwise buy.

Schools & universities

Move on furniture, books and equipment at the end of a term or year.

Churches, mosques & faith groups

Coordinate giving inside your congregation and the streets around it.

Government and public bodies are welcome too – redistributing public assets rather than disposing of them.

WHAT YOU GET

A page of your own, and a team that can run it.

Your own storefront

A public page carrying your logo, your description and everything you have listed – at givny.com/o/your-name. A link you can put in a newsletter, a footer or a tender document.

Your team, not your password

Colleagues get their own logins. Owners, managers and listers each see a different amount, so an intern can add items without touching your account settings. Staff leave; the listings stay yours.

A verified badge

We check that the organisation is real before your page goes public. The badge tells a stranger they are dealing with a registered entity rather than an anonymous account.

Followers who get told

People can follow your organisation. When you list something, they are notified – so a clear-out reaches an audience that already wants what you have, instead of sitting unseen.

An impact record you can actually use

Your dashboard keeps a running count of what you listed, what reached a household, how many separate households you reached, and an estimate of the weight diverted from disposal. It produces a sentence you can paste straight into a report:

"[Your organisation] passed on 34 items to 26 households through Givny, diverting an estimated 410 kg from disposal."

Weight is an estimate, and the platform says so wherever it appears. It is calculated from the size band recorded against each item, not from weighing – a stated estimate is more useful to a report than no figure at all, and more honest than a false precision.

WHO ON YOUR TEAM SEES WHAT

Role	Can do
Owner	Everything, including the team and account settings
Manager	List, answer requests, and manage the storefront
Lister	Add and edit listings only

The same page, on a laptop and in a hand.

Most people in Ghana will open your page on a phone. It is built for that first, and scales up – one link, one page, no separate mobile version to maintain.

Storefront on desktop – cover, logo, standing, share links and everything currently listed.

On a phone

The same content, stacked: your logo over the cover, then your name, your standing, and the follow button as the first thing a visitor can act on.

One link, everywhere

givny.com/o/your-name works in a WhatsApp message, an email footer, a newsletter or a printed flyer.

Every item also gets its own page and its own link – shareable into WhatsApp, and findable in search.

Four steps. The first one takes five minutes.

Apply

Tell us who you are, what you expect to list and who to contact. Five minutes, online.

We check you are real

We verify the organisation against its registration. Usually a couple of working days. You will hear either way, with a reason.

Set up your page

Add a logo, a short description of who you are, your first items and your colleagues. A checklist walks you through it.

You go live

Your storefront is public, your listings reach people nearby, and your impact record starts counting from the first handover.

What we ask in return

Nothing financial. Three commitments, because a page that breaks them damages the people it was meant to help:

- List things that still work. Broken is fine, if you say so.
- Answer requests. A page nobody replies from is worse than no page.
- Hand over when you say you will – a household is planning around it.

THE QUESTIONS WE ALWAYS GET

What does it cost?

Nothing. No listing fee, no commission, no subscription. Givny does not take a cut because nothing is sold.

Who collects the items?

The person who asked for it, from an address and at a time you agree with them.

Do we choose who gets it?

Yes. Requests arrive in your inbox and you accept or decline each one. Nothing leaves without your say-so.

What if nobody wants it?

It stays on your page until someone does, or until you remove it. You are never committed to anything you list.

RECOGNITION

Measured on what reached people, not on volume.

Organisations hold a public standing, shown on their storefront and on a leaderboard ranked separately from individual members.

What counts

Items that actually reached a household. How many separate households – ten items to ten homes beats ten to one. Weight diverted. Whether you answer people.

What doesn't

Listing volume alone. A warehouse posting a thousand items nobody collects ranks below a school that rehomed forty desks.

Why it's trustworthy

Every figure is calculated from real handovers at the moment it is shown. Nothing is self-reported, and nothing can be edited into existence – including by us.

A crest you can put in a report

Your standing can be downloaded as an image – for a board pack, a sustainability slide, or a post announcing what your team cleared this quarter. A number behind a login does not travel; an image does.

Goods go to households near you, who ask for a specific item and collect it themselves. If an item is claimed and not collected, it goes back on your page.

Organisations are ranked on their own board, separately from individual members.

THE LADDER

Points come from handovers, households reached, weight diverted and requests answered. Thresholds sit well above the ones individual members climb, because an organisation clearing a single office already out-lists an active neighbour.

THE NEXT STEP

Apply in five minutes. Nothing to sign.

Start at givny.com/for-organisations – or reply to this document and we will set you up ourselves.

Have this ready

- Your registered organisation name and registration number
- A contact name, email and phone number
- Your logo, and a sentence about who you are
- A rough idea of what you would list first
